

Bloomberg Businessweek

August 10 — August 23, 2015

INTERNATIONAL UNIVERSITY

TSAM LIBRARY — SERIAL

Supplier / Publisher: Direct

Date Receive: 8/14/08/2015

Cover Trail

How the cover gets made

Opening Remarks Making water easier to trade could take the sting out of California's drought 10

Bloomberg View Greece can't go on without relief • Putting more emphasis on Alzheimer's 12

Global Economics

Why $15 an hour might not make sense nationwide 14

Islamic State's slave auctions 16

For Russia's faltering companies, it's Putin to the rescue 16

The double dip in oil prices leaves shale producers with few options 18

A breath of fresh air in Beijing. Really 18

Companies/Industries

Diebold's top executives are all over the place 21

No-frills grocery chain Aldi takes aim at the organic quinoa crowd 23

Universal Music wants to be in pictures 24

To compete in the Midwest's fastest-growing high school sport, bring a shotgun 24

Politics/Policy

Baltimore's new police chief needs to stop the killing 27

Covering student debts with taxpayer dollars 29

Backing Chris Christie can be good for your law firm 30

Charlie Rose talks to EPA chief Gina McCarthy 31

Georgia farmers check out Bill Gates's onions 32

Technology

The FBI links two former Florida State frat brothers to the JPMorgan hack 35

Chinese coders are translating Apple's iOS programming language 36

At Berkeley, robots solve problems on their own 37

Software that knows exactly how you feel 38

Innovation: An undersea craft practices in the Antarctic for a mission to one of Jupiter's moons 39

Markets/Finance

Harvard B-school grads no longer see the upside to investment banking 41

The real estate gold in Mumbai's garbage dumps 42

County officials in Mississippi get lucky on a swaps bet 43

China hands a little-known state agency more than $400 billion to save its swooning stock market 44

U.S. agribusinesses accused of manipulating prices will pay steep settlements 46

Features

European Vexation Google can't seem to escape its antitrust nightmare 50

Arctic or Bust Shell forges ahead with its risky, expensive plan to drill, baby, drill 58

Man vs. Machine An ex-cop declared war on the lie detector. Now he's facing jail time 64

Problem Child I'm Reddit, and I'm a managerial cautionary tale—ask me anything! 72

Gameboy As e-sports take off, a 16-year-old from Pakistan is closing in on his first million 80

The Backpage Summer strategies for leaving work early without being a sneak 84

1 "Cover is on Google in Europe. It's fighting a legal battle there amid antitrust and privacy concerns."

"So Europeans hate Google?"

"Actually, it's much more popular in Europe than in the U.S. But some industry competitors, publishers, and politicians are leading the cause."

"I knew they'd hate it. Every man, woman, and child in Europe ... disgusted by Google. Astounding."

2 "A violent WWII-style battle, but this time the enemy is IN the computer."

"I rarely say this, but that seems like an overstatement."

3 "Graffiti over Larry and Sergey as if painted by a precocious European rabble-rouser."

"Might be confusing."

4 "In America you throw tomatoes, but in Europe you'd throw baguettes and pasta—because that's what they eat there."

"Maybe food isn't the best way into a tech story."

5 "A glitch inside Google maps, and the type can be made of pasta."

"No pasta. Otherwise fine."

Bloomberg Businessweek Contents

PHOTOGRAPH BY THOMAS PRIOR FOR BLOOMBERG BUSINESSWEEK

"Once we have a billion users and a robust mobile offering, then we'll sit down and talk about monetization"

p72

"What's the use of two-factor authenticated e-mail if the NSA is reading it, too?"

p50

"If we let issues fall through the cracks, the Vidalia onion will be just another sweet onion"

p32