

Bloomberg
Businessweek
Contents

"Most people are antisocial. If you were brought together around games and entertainment, instantly the barriers blast away"

p44

"Habitual, frequent use of Amazon for groceries is the ultimate goal"

p21

"Not that long ago, it would have felt dirty to talk about branding Jewish culture"

p67

"I was in college when ESPN started. I felt sorry for the people working there"

p46

|   |    |
|---|----|
| Opening Remarks Trump's tax reform push could end as badly as repeal and replace           | 8  |
| Bloomberg View Let California steer on emissions • Central America's tax catastrophe       | 10 |
| Movers ▲ Coal mining ▼ The length of the lines at Whole Foods                              | 13 |
| Global Economics   |    |
| Mexico opens its oil sector to foreigners, and protests flare up                                  | 15 |
| Brexit slows Eastern Europe's brain drain   | 16 |
| Global growth forecasts yield surprises in South America  | 17 |
| Five years late and twice the projected price, Berlin's airport is the ultimate flight delay      | 18 |
| Companies/Industries   |    |
| The $800 billion grocery industry tantalizes—and frustrates—Amazon                               | 21 |
| A reversible long-term contraceptive for men is greeted with a chorus of shrugs                   | 22 |
| Staples moves beyond its big-box roots  | 24 |
| Hong Kong loves Teslas. With a tax break ending, we'll see how deep the feeling goes              | 25 |
| Politics/Policy  |    |
| Internal divisions are turning the GOP into the Republican't Party                                | 27 |
| Putin rival Alexei Navalny was ramping up a national campaign—prior to his arrest in Moscow       | 28 |
| The Hillary superdonor who landed a gig in Trump's Treasury                                       | 30 |
| Everything you need to know to bid on the "big, beautiful" border wall                            | 31 |
| Technology   |    |
| As iPhone sales tail off, Apple's lucrative App Store becomes sweeter to developers               | 33 |
| Boosting AI's IQ by teaching computers to beat video games  | 34 |
| Hackers are raising their sights from mayhem to moolah  | 35 |
| Can Samsung's Galaxy S8 phone make buyers forget exploding batteries and a CEO perp walk?         | 36 |
| Innovation: Prototyping the helicopter of the future  | 37 |
| Markets/Finance  |    |
| China's bumper crop of specialized regional markets—for metals, orchids, donkeys...               | 38 |
| Trump owes Deutsche Bank money, putting the lender in an uncomfortable spot                       | 39 |
| An obscure Chinese company joins the Russell 2000 and heads for the stratosphere                  | 40 |
| Russia's Sberbank may decide the fate of a sprawling Croatian conglomerate                        | 42 |
| Focus On/Small Business  |    |
| Two tinkerers—and circus escapees—are opening a micro amusement park in L.A.                      | 44 |
| Spain's recovery is leaving the nation's mom and pop shops behind                                 | 46 |
| The best antidote to the loss of key personnel? Have them document what they do                   | 46 |
| Breakdown: President Trump's claims about higher hurdles for entrepreneurs don't hold water       | 47 |
| Features   |    |
| Momentum Shift ESPN had a license to print money—then the cord cutters came along          | 48 |
| America First? The factory Trump got Carrier to keep in Indiana was doomed either way      | 54 |
| The Rechargeable Future Growing demand creates a lithium rush in Nevada                    | 60 |
| Etc.   |    |
| With Jewish culture going mainstream, matzo may become the new pita chip                          | 67 |
| Music: Break out your boombox—the mixtape is back   | 70 |
| The Critic: In The Boss Baby , Alec Baldwin's newborn corporate raider beats the estimates | 71 |
| Wine: Adventurous vintners are redrawing the map for oenophiles                                   | 72 |
| Fashion: The design stars of Generation Z build their success on social media                     | 74 |
| What I Wear to Work: Mic CEO Chris Altchek takes his sister's style advice                        | 75 |
| How Did I Get Here? We have Peet's Coffee CEO Dave Burwick to thank for Mountain Dew's comeback   | 76 |

1 "Story's on ESPN. It's the latest media organization to be affected by cord cutting, which has cost the network millions of cable subscribers."

"Does this mean that mainstream sports will become a barely acknowledged niche interest? And that adults who never engaged in sports, perhaps because of the childhood trauma of being picked last in every game, possibly due to a lack of coordination and a full-figured stature, will no longer be ridiculed for not being able to participate in 80 percent of all conversations with their guy friends?"

"No, it doesn't mean that at all."

"I'm just not sure it's newsworthy, then."

